Organizing the Grid Before you begin retouching, choose File⇒Preferences. On the left side of the dialog box that opens (see Figure 11-1), make sure the following options are checked: * **Versioning Options:** Set this check box to Enable so that you can revert back to earlier versions of your image. Even if you don't have anything to revert to, setting this option is a good idea just in case you get an idea for a change later and decide that you really, really want to try it out. * **Save for Web and Devices:** This setting saves your current version of the image, not just the file. A simple way to rename the file, if you want to do that, is to use the Rename File dialog box, which is explained in Chapter 12. FIGURE 11-1: The Preferences dialog box lets you set options for versioning and saving.

Comparison of body surface potential maps to the 12-lead electrocardiogram in patients referred for ajmaline test. The ajmaline test has been proposed as an alternative to the standard ECG stress test. It uses ajmaline to induce ventricular tachycardia and is indicated in patients with normal resting ECG who have a previous history of cardiac arrest or syncope and have inducible ventricular tachycardia or ventricular fibrillation on the standard ECG. It may reduce the number of standard ECG-related test-related adverse events. A body surface potential map (BSPM) is formed by analyzing the synchronized R wave of the ECG and is a global map that is formed without the need of electrode placement on the thorax. The purpose of this study was to determine whether or not the BSPM could be used as a non-invasive way of measuring the response to inducible ventricular tachycardia or ventricular fibrillation to the ajmaline test in patients with a previous history of cardiac arrest and with inducible ventricular tachycardia or ventricular fibrillation in the standard ECG stress test. Twenty-six patients with a previous history of cardiac arrest or syncope, and a positive inducible ECG stress test with inducible ventricular tachycardia or ventricular fibrillation, were studied. All subjects were first examined with a BSPM and then underwent the ajmaline test. A BSPM was formed from the R wave of the ECG recorded at a sampling rate of 100 Hz and was used to determine whether the ajmaline test could induce a similar heart rhythm. There was a positive correlation between the BSPM and the inducible ventricular arrhythmias during the standard ECG stress test (Pearson's correlation  $0.6 \pm 0.2$ , p

What's New in the Photoshop 2020 (version 21)?

The American economy added fewer than 75,000 new jobs in August, continuing a brutal stretch that will not end anytime soon. While the unemployment rate held steady at 6.2 percent, the country created a total of only 75,000 new jobs in August, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported Thursday. ADVERTISEMENT The figures represent a slight improvement from the 76,000 added in July, but are far from the 200,000 jobs typically needed per month to keep up with population growth. The August jobs report comes as the country continues to fight a war of public opinion over the impact of the Trump administration's economic policies. The president's trade war with China and his repeated assertions that trade deals undermine American workers have fueled nationwide concerns over the effect of Trump's economic agenda on workers. Policymakers are also faced with the possibility that years of low job creation could harm businesses that are being forced to rely on fewer and lower-paying jobs to attract and retain workers. Trump has lashed out at the low job growth after years of strengthening the economy, including a period of record-low unemployment. The report of just 75,000 jobs created in August is the first to show a net loss of workers since January, the report said. The job gains still averaged 2.3 million per year, however, just slightly above the 1.8 million needed to prevent continued mass layoffs. Job creation has come in just under the rate needed to prevent the unemployment rate from going up, the BLS said. A net job loss of nearly 80,000 full-time jobs was posted in July, marking the first time since the financial crisis the unemployment rate had gone down in a single month. The report comes on the heels of another employment report which showed wages have been rising at a pace the fastest in nearly a decade. Data showed that worker pay began accelerating faster in June, reflecting the trend that the amount of pay packets picked up for workers in the fourth quarter of 2018 increased at the fastest pace in decades. That report also indicated that the majority of workers in the United States were still unable to spend any money on what they earn. Average household incomes increased by 2.6 percent over the course of the year. And while 65 percent of families got some pay raises last year, nearly two-thirds — or 66 percent — of workers reported that their salaries had not gone up at all. Still, wage
